Introduction:

Infrastructure development is one of the key drivers for India to become global economic leader. Any time and cost overrun in implementation of these projects would be detrimental to the progress of the country. The State Governments are very important stake-holders in the infrastructure building process. It has been observed that more than 50% of the central sector projects experience time delay beyond their scheduled date of completion, due to various generic problems being faced by the projects during implementation. Some of which are related to State Government departments and agencies. Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation, Govt. of India has also expressed their concern regarding this issue. There is, therefore, a great need for a pro-active intervention by State Governments, at the highest level.
